10 Practical Tips for Faculty

1. Be proactive in communicating with international students
2. Normalize “office hours” (boundaries are good)
3. Check-in with students after assigning group work
4. Talk to students individually about participation and encourage students to share their unique perspectives
5. Be conscious of discussions/topics that presume a nuanced understanding of American history and politics
6. Recognize that language proficiency is not usually their primary barrier to academic success
7. Clarify your expectations on class policies
8. Provide examples of successful coursework
9. Understand the difference between degree-seeking students and exchange students
10. Collaborate with the Center for International Education (CIE)
